Common problems for auto insurance salespeople

For most salespeople in the auto insurance industry, there is a shared set of pain points. You must continuously overcome these challenges to close sales. According to the individuals we talked to, people in the industry are struggling with:

- Making too many calls: Itâ??s a waste of time to spend all day pursuing leads that arenâ??t interested in your service. With a high call volume, youâ??ll need a high ROI to make it worthwhile.
- Generating qualified leads: Selling auto insurance is not as easy as selling an ice cream cone. Qualifications are required to be eligible for the sale. It can be hard to scope out those individuals in advance.
- Making a convincing pitch: Once you have a qualified lead, itâ??s all in the pitch and communication style. Making a compelling argument is essential.
- Converting: This part is in the customersâ?? hands. However, having all the previous steps in line makes it more likely that the sale will convert.

- Keep your pipeline filledâ??With the sheer volume of leads coming your way, you know that you wonâ??t have to seek more potential customers. You will always have a pool of interested candidates.

The benefit of aged leads

At The Leads Warehouse, we specialize in aged auto insurance leads. We get a mixture of internal and call center transfer feeds of 5,000+ records per day with a 7-day age. We deliver flat files between one week and one month. Additionally, we offer older records of aged auto insurance leads for even lower prices.

People claim that aged leads mean customers may have already made a purchase. Therefore, they may have lost interest in the product. However, we know the benefits outweigh the risks. The leads may be people who came close to making a purchase and backed out last minute. These leads are ready to buy and open to your offers.
